

THE EXCHANGE FILES

Field Report: 4:22 p.m., Ogallala, Nebraska

A crate of feathers slated for transport to a local landfill mysteriously vanish from the loading dock of a processing plant.

Days later, a large sculpture of an angel appeared at a local high school, adorned with the missing feathers.

Divine intervention? A paranormal force? A miracle? How did this happen?

There is a rational explanation. The business and the high school both participate in the Materials Exchange Program. It matches materials generated by a company with the needs of others in the state.

To the processing plant, the feathers are waste. To a high school, they're art supplies.
