

When in Doubt

We've all done it. The reasons may vary - from wishful thinking to (and let's be honest here) stubbornness or even laziness - but we've all done it. Probably more than once too, and for a variety of reasons. Certainly not all the time, or thoughtlessly as others might, but we all have our foibles, and gosh darn it, if the recycling man doesn't like it, he can just take it out! Ahem... pardon the indignation (another potential cause) but when a simple process ends up making everything more complicated, it can be difficult to know the right thing to do. I'm talking of course about single-stream curbside recycling, and how even the most ardent recycler likely adds to the problem of contamination.

In the interest of full disclosure, I was once, many years ago of course, but I once was a stubborn non-rinser. I cleaned my lunchtime frozen entree container enough to join the club, but those little specks of broccoli and carrots, not to mention the cheese or sauce that had dried on the plastic? Forget about it! "A little foodstuff never hurt anyone," I thought. "They should be happy I'm recycling at all!"

Which of course made no sense, but much to my chagrin, that was my reasoning until a co-worker drew attention to the problems it caused.

Residents that move or change haulers may find that materials taken by one curbside hauler are not acceptable to another, or parameters may change from one month to the next thanks to diminishing markets. For these frustrated recyclers, defiance is a likely the motivator - daring their hauler to NOT recycle it.

Others are less acrimonious, even tending toward the aspirational. "I don't see where it's UNacceptable", they think. "It SHOULD be recyclable, and maybe it is, so let's just play it safe and throw this old garden hose into the bin as well."

Trouble is, "playing it safe" by recycling what isn't expressly accepted, actually does more harm than good. One's intentions might be nobler than the non-rinser, or the careless used diaper thrower (yes, it really does happen) but in the end the result is the same - contamination.

With the specter of China's recycling ban looming over the industry, and hard as it may be to say, the mantra of every single one of us should be "When In Doubt, Throw It Out"! A shocking sentiment to be sure - anathema to many a proud recycler, but one that also begs the question: "If there's a chance of it being considered contamination, then who am I helping by trying to recycle it?" As we said in the last issue of The Link, if the goal of recycling is to supply feed-stock for manufacturing new products (and it is), then we need to accept that not everything can be recycled.

For many of us, that's a hard pill to swallow - we can't imagine throwing away items that seem synonymous with the process. Take the complicated material that is plastic, and the difficulties posed by such a wide variety of resins. For many earnest recyclers, the idea of trashing all of their plastics except those marked #1 & #2 is almost painful, but if it slows the process down, contaminates usable resins, or ends up in the landfill anyway, then no good can come from putting it in the bin.

Then there's glass - the easiest, most recyclable material on earth, but sadly the bane of single-stream recycling as well. Destined to break and splinter until much is reduced to fine powder, glass in the single-stream coats and contaminates everything it touches. If I hadn't known the reasons, the day my hauler quit taking glass would have been a dark day indeed. Fortunately, there are multi-stream drop-off containers all over town, where the glass of anyone willing to make the effort is properly recycled. And therein lies the solution to the China recycling crisis: not multi-stream recycling, or having options - wonderful things to be sure, but not everyone has access. No, I mean each of us making the effort to ensure high quality, uncontaminated feedstock. Unlike "mixed recyclables", it's still moving, and for good money too.

The problem for Material Recovery Facilities (MRFs) is that the stuff coming in the door is so contaminated - 25% - 30% depending on who you talk to - that clean output is nearly impossible, at least for the majority operating antiquated machinery. Many have invested in new technologies right along, and others are in the process of retooling, but it's incumbent upon each and every one of us to do our part. Indeed, when 1 in every 3 or 4 items entering MRFs is considered contamination, either the occasional hooligan is dumping straight up trash into recycling bins, or each of us is making the occasional mistake. I'm guessing it's the latter, so while the day may very well come when our recycling system can handle the occasioned aspirational or defiant act, today it's in danger of dying. When In Doubt, Throw It Out - it truly is the least we can do.

Most Common Contaminants

While there may be other avenues for some of it, this list, provided by Waste Management, should relieve any doubt - do NOT place the following items into single-stream recycling bins, no matter where you live:

- NO Recyclables in Plastic Bags:

Empty loose recyclables in bin, but leave the plastic bag out

- NO Food or Liquids:

Compost Instead!

- NO Electronics or Small Appliances:

Donate if still good, or take to a scrap recycler

- NO Textiles, Bedding, Rugs or Carpet:

Donate if in good condition

- NO Hoses, Holiday Lights, Hangers & Extension Cords:

They wrap around equipment & can shut down an entire facility

- NO Plastic Bags, Film/Sheeting or Flexible Film Packaging:

Take plastic bags back to your local grocer - notorious for shutting down equipment as well!

- NO Paper Napkins, Plates, Cups, Tissues, Christmas or Other Wrapping Paper:

Compost if possible, and don't forget to recycle the cardboard tube!

- NO Polystyrene Foam:

Your community may have a drop-off program. Donate packing peanuts to Nonprofit Organizations that ship a lot.

- NO Tires, Auto Parts or Scrap Metal:

Can damage equipment and are safety hazards. Contact local scrap metal or tire recyclers for options

- NO Concrete, Wood or Construction Debris:

Can damage equipment and are safety hazards.

- NO Yard Waste or Wood:

Compost or put in yard waste cart

- NO Non-Recyclable Plastic:

Not all plastics are recyclable - for single-stream purposes, recycle only food & beverage bottles, jugs & tubs
