

Nebraska Governor Signs Safe Battery Collection and Recycling Act into Law

Article originally appeared in Waste Advantage Magazine

Batteries are powering a fire problem—Nebraska just took action. Batteries are everywhere. But when tossed in the trash, they can spark fires in garbage trucks, endanger workers, and damage recycling facilities. On May 20, Nebraska Governor Jim Pillen signed LB36 officially enacting the Safe Battery Collection and Recycling Act. The bill marks a major milestone for environmental protection, public safety, and extended producer responsibility (EPR) in the state. This new legislation tackles one of the fastest-growing, most valuable, and most dangerous waste streams in the country—lithium-ion and other household batteries.

Championed by Senator Jana Hughes and developed through collaboration with Nebraska state officials, local governments, and national partners—including the Product Stewardship Institute—the new law establishes a statewide, producer-funded battery stewardship program for portable and medium-format batteries. It reflects years of policy development and incorporates best practices from states like Vermont, Washington, and Illinois.

What the Law Does:

LB36 establishes a producer-funded battery stewardship program for portable and medium-format batteries sold in Nebraska. That means battery producers—not taxpayers—will now be responsible for the safe collection, recycling, and education programs needed to manage battery waste.

Key elements of the law include:

- Producer responsibility: Beginning in 2028, producers must join a state-approved Battery Stewardship Organization (BSO) to sell batteries in Nebraska.
- Free statewide collection: Convenient drop-off sites must be available across the state, including rural and underserved areas.
- Safety protocols: Batteries can no longer be landfilled or incinerated, and new rules ensure proper handling of damaged or recalled batteries.
- State oversight: The Nebraska Department of Environment and Energy will approve and monitor all program plans.
- Clear performance goals: Programs must track consumer awareness, collection success, and recycling efficiency.

Why it Matters:

Discarded batteries don't just pose a fire risk—they also contain valuable materials like lithium, cobalt, and zinc that can be reused when collected properly. But right now, most of those batteries end up in the trash. LB36 shifts the burden away from local governments and toward the producers who profit from battery sales—creating a more sustainable, accountable system.

"The Safe Battery Collection and Recycling Act is a big first step in addressing the ongoing public safety issue with the improper disposal of lithium batteries at the end of their useful life. This provides Nebraska with the ability to implement an industry led and industry funded solution to collect and recycle batteries instead of throwing them away or wish-cycling them. I am thankful for my colleagues' overwhelming support and the battery industry's willingness to help mitigate the increasing occurrence of devastating fires caused by these batteries being thrown away rather than recycled," said Senator Jana Hughes.

"This law is a major step forward in protecting public safety and the environment," said Kent Holm, Director of Douglas County (Nebraska) Environmental Services. "By shifting responsibility to battery producers and ensuring convenient collection statewide, Nebraska is setting a strong example for how to manage battery waste responsibly and sustainably."

"This new law addresses critical public safety and environmental risks while promoting sustainable battery management," said Scott Cassel, CEO and Founder of PSI. "It's a pragmatic, well-structured solution that will reduce fires, protect workers, and conserve valuable materials."

With the passage of LB36, Nebraska becomes the latest in a growing list of states—alongside Vermont, Washington, Illinois, and Colorado—to adopt battery extended producer responsibility (EPR) laws.

PSI supported the development of Nebraska's law by sharing model legislation, policy research, and lessons learned from other states. As implementation moves forward, PSI will continue to work with state leaders and local communities to ensure the program's success.

KEEP CASS COUNTY BEAUTIFUL

Statewide Used Oil Disposal Sites

Following the passage of LB1257 banning motor oil from state landfills, Keep Nebraska Beautiful began working with local and county officials across the state to establish a program that would provide Nebraska farmers, ranchers, & residents access to free disposal. Since 2000, the Used Oil Collection Program has helped place collection tanks in 67 counties from Richardson to Dawes, and is sustained through the collective sale of used oil for use in asphalt production. The program has seen nearly 2,400,000 gal collected statewide, for an estimated hazardous waste disposal savings of some $217,000.

Today, the majority of Nebraska counties are served – provided people know where to go. While many site contacts are affiliated with a particular community, please note that, as long as you reside in the county, you are free to dispose of your oil there.
